a quarterly publication by marketfolly.com

Background:

Each quarter, hedge funds and institutional money managers are required to disclose their portfolios to the Securities & Exchange Commission (SEC) via 13F filing.

These filings disclose long U.S. equity positions, American Depositary Receipts (ADRs), stock options (puts/calls), warrants, as well as convertible notes. They do not disclose positions in other asset classes (such as commodities, currencies, or debt). They also do not reveal positions in international markets, short sales or cash positions.

Hedge Fund Wisdom, a quarterly publication by MarketFolly.com, aggregates, updates, and analyzes the latest portfolios of top investment managers. The positions in this issue are hedge fund fourth quarter holdings as of December 31st, 2012.

Quote of the Quarter:

"So much of the driver of any asset class's returns is based on how events actually transpire relative to expectations. So there's a certain discounted growth rate in equities."

Hedge Fund Consensus Buy List

Consensus New Positions

This is a consensus list of the stocks that hedge funds in this issue started brand new positions in:

Workday (WDAY): 20% of funds in this issue disclosed new WDAY stakes: Blue Ridge Capital, Lone Pine Capital, Tiger Global, Coatue Management, and Passport Capital. The company completed its initial public offering (IPO) in the fourth quarter. Given that the funds covered are some of the most prominent in the industry, it seems likely that they participated in the IPO rather than buying shares in the open market, but there's no way to know for sure.

VeriSign (VRSN): 16% of funds disclosed new VRSN stakes: Berkshire Hathaway, JANA Partners, Tiger Global, and Soros Fund. This is the second time in the past three quarters that VRSN has been a consensus buy among hedge funds profiled herein (Q1 2012 and Q2 2012). Funds took advantage of a dip in shares after the Department of Justice nixed a price increase in VRSN's contract renewal.

ADT (ADT): 16% of funds disclosed new ADT stakes: JANA Partners, Passport Capital, Soros Fund, and Tiger Management. This company completed its spin-off from the Tyco conglomerate in the fourth quarter. Some funds owned Tyco pre-split and received shares this way, while others bought the newly traded shares in the open market.

Herbalife (HLF): 16% of funds disclosed new HLF stakes: Third Point, Lone Pine Capital, and Coatue Management. Bill Ackman (Pershing Square Capital) gave a presentation on why investors should short HLF and shares plunged. Many investors took advantage of this dip to initiate a position. HLF is featured in the equity analysis section later in this issue.

Freeport McMoran (FCX): 16% of funds disclosed new FCX stakes: Paulson & Co, Omega Advisors, Appaloosa Management, and Farallon Capital. During the quarter, the company announced it was buying McMoran Exploration (MMR) and Plains Exploration & Production (PXP). Shares took a nosedive, likely prompting many hedge funds to hit the bid.

Consensus Increase List

Hedge Fund Consensus Increase List

Consensus Increased Positions

This is a consensus list of the stocks that hedge funds in this issue already owned but bought more shares of:

HCA(HCA): 16% of funds in this issue added to pre-existing HCA stakes: Bridger Management, Blue Ridge Capital, Glenview Capital, and Tiger Management. President Obama was re-elected during the quarter, securing Obamacare's near-term future and potentially boosting the outlook for for-profit hospitals like HCA.

Express Scripts (ESRX): 16% of funds added to pre-existing ESRX stakes: Maverick Capital, Farallon Capital, Omega Advisors, and Perry Capital. ESRX was also originally a consensus buy in Q1 of 2012 as well. Shares dropped in the quarter after the company's earnings report as some investors worried about margins. The company has been integrating its acquisition of Medco Health.

Equinix (EQIX): 16% of funds added to pre-existing EQIX stakes: Lone Pine Capital, Blue Ridge Capital, Viking Global, and Farallon Capital. EQIX was featured in the equity analysis section of the Q1 2012 issue of Hedge Fund Wisdom and shares are up almost 43% since then.

Citigroup (C): 16% of funds added to pre-existing C stakes: Soros Fund, Viking Global, Pennant Capital, and Omega Advisors. Shares steadily climbed higher throughout the fourth quarter as confidence in some financials slowly returns.

Consensus Sell List

Hedge Fund Consensus Sell List

Consensus Sold Positions

This is a consensus list of the stocks that hedge funds in this issue sold completely out of:

Apple (AAPL): 36% of funds in this issue completely exited their AAPL stakes: Viking Global, Lone Pine Capital, Third Point, Omega Advisors, JANA Partners, Farallon Capital, Bridger Management, and Passport Capital. AAPL also appears on the next page on the “consensus decrease” list. So there is another slew of managers that sold some of their AAPL shares but still retain a position.

Molycorp (MCP): 16% of funds completely exited their MCP stakes: Coatue Management, Farallon Capital, Soros Fund, and Passport Capital.

SPDR S&P 500 (SPY): 12% of funds completely exited their SPY stakes: Perry Capital, Omega Advisors, and Passport Capital. These funds were likely using this exchange-traded index fund as a way to run increased equity exposure.

Tyco (TYC): 12% of funds completely exited their TYC stakes: Glenview Capital, Soros Fund, and Maverick Capital. This one should probably have an asterisk by it because the company completed its split-up into a few different companies: ADT (ADT), Pentair (PNR), and Tyco (TYC). Some funds bought for the spin-off catalyst that has now passed. But as you saw a few pages earlier on the “consensus buy” list, the ADT portion of the spin-off was in high demand. The remaining TYC business consists of their fire and security segment.

Qualcomm (QCOM): 12% of funds completely exited their QCOM stakes: Farallon Capital, Coatue Management, and Soros Fund.

Consensus Decrease List

Hedge Fund Consensus Decrease List

Consensus Decreased Positions

This is a consensus list of the stocks that hedge funds in this issue reduced their position sizes in:

Google (GOOG): 32% of funds in this issue reduced their GOOG position size: Maverick Capital, Passport Capital, Bridger Management, Appaloosa Management, Tiger Management, Coatue Management, Soros Fund, and Omega Advisors. GOOG hit new highs (at the time) and then sold off during the quarter. Since then, they've gone on to hit all-time highs in 2013.

American International Group (AIG): 28% of funds reduced their AIG position size: Soros Fund, Third Point, Appaloosa Management, Viking Global, Fairholme Capital, Glenview Capital, and Omega Advisors. AIG was featured in the equity analysis section of the Q2 2012 issue of Hedge Fund Wisdom and it was a consensus buy among hedge funds in Q3.

Visa (V): 24% of funds reduced their V position size: Viking Global, Tiger Global, Lone Pine Capital, Maverick Capital, Farallon Capital, and Tiger Management. Shares of V have steadily climbed higher so this could potentially be a case of simply locking in some profits or concerns about consumer spending.

Apple (AAPL): 20% of funds reduced their AAPL position size: Coatue Management, Tiger Global, Blue Ridge Capital, Pennant Capital, and Tiger Management. As you saw on the page prior, AAPL was also on the "consensus sell" list as many other hedge funds completely liquidated their positions.

Qualcomm (QCOM): 20% of funds reduced their QCOM position size: Maverick Capital, Pennant Capital, Lone Pine Capital, Tiger Management, and Omega Advisors. QCOM was also on the "consensus sell" list as other managers completely exited their stakes.

Baupost Group joined the legion of other hedge funds in American International Group (AIG) by starting a new position in the stock. The event-driven path on this name has been outlined in the Q2 2012 issue of Hedge Fund Wisdom, so be sure to login and have a look if you missed it. Apart from this, the other major takeaway from Seth Klarman's equity portfolio is that he completely exited shares of Hewlett Packard (HPQ). The company is clearly a mess when even noted value investors throw in the towel at cheap valuation. In the tech sector, Baupost also reduced its stake in Oracle by 22% during the quarter.

In other minor portfolio moves, Baupost Group seemed to have swapped a lot of positions. For instance, they sold off around 38% of their stake in News Corp NWSA shares and bought 34% more of the NWS share class. Additionally, Baupost sold their Microsoft common stock, but added Microsoft calls instead. Turning to their gold mining plays, they seem to continue to favor NovaGold Resources (NG) as they continued to buy as shares slid (something they've done for many consecutive quarters). However, they almost chopped their stake in Allied Nevada Gold (ANV) in half.

Seth Klarman's year-end letter to investors had some excellent quotes as usual. Here's what he had to say: "As investors have become accustomed to sputtering economies and massive government intervention, episodic "risk-on" and "risk-off" behaviors drive the capital markets. Unexpected bad news means risk off. A stopgap solution to the crisis du jour is offered -- i.e., a bailout, a rescue, a Band-Aid deal, QE(n) -- and risk on resumes. We have been on a roller-coaster ride for the last four years and counting, with no meaningful recovery, no feasible solutions, and ineffectual leadership. Investors conditioned to the short-term trading mentality are increasingly ill prepared for policy changes. What will happen when the Fed declares, as it someday must, that the era of low interest rates is at an end? What if governments holding trillions of dollars of sovereign debt and other securities stop buying and begin to sell? Or if another serious crisis -- economic, political, international -- materializes and governments have insufficient ammunition to intervene? The content, though not the timing, of the next chapter in market history is quite predictable. Few will say they saw it coming, though, in fact, everyone could have seen it if they had only chosen to look." Klarman then also went on to write, "We make no heroic assumptions in our analysis, hoping, instead, that by compounding multiple conservative assumptions, we will create such a substantial margin of safety that a lot can go wrong without impairing our capital much or even at all."

In activity since the close of the quarter, Baupost has increased its Idenix Pharmaceuticals (IDIX) position even further.

New Positions:

The past few quarters at Berkshire Hathaway have seen a higher than usual amount of portfolio activity and you have Warren Buffett's two new portfolio managers to thank for that. Ted Weschler and Todd Combs are typically responsible for investments made that are less than $1 billion, while Buffett makes the really big bets. It's worth highlighting, however, that two bets that are assumedly attributed to Weschler and Combs have over time grown to become quite large positions. During the fourth quarter, they added to their DirecTV (DTV) position by 15% and Davita (DVA) stake by 33%. These two holdings are now worth $1.7 billion and $1.5 billion respectively. As highlighted in the past two issues of Hedge Fund Wisdom, Ted Weschler held shares of DVA at his previous hedge fund and seems to be leading the charge with this investment, buying tons of shares between the $108-112 levels.

In other portfolio activity from the quarter, Berkshire added significantly to its position in General Motors (GM), boosting the amount of shares owned by 66%. They also increased their position size in Precision Castparts (PCP) to the tune of 58%. In the quarter prior, Berkshire also owned shares of the old Kraft entity (former ticker KFT). The company split up into Kraft Foods (new ticker KRFT) and Mondelez (new ticker MDLZ). KRFT houses the company's North American grocery segment and seems to be more geared toward income investors while MDLZ houses the international snacks company, which is more of a growth business. Berkshire's latest portfolio shows that they decided to hold on to both companies as of quarter end. The split took place at the beginning of October, so it will be interesting to see if Buffett's team eventually favors one business over the other. Right now, their stake in MDLZ ($326 million) is considerably larger than their KRFT stake ($75 million). The KRFT position appears as 'new' on the next page, but just keep in mind that is a function of the spin-off and new tickers being created. They received these shares from the spin.

There were two brand new positions initiated by the younger Berkshire portfolio managers: Archer Daniels Midland (ADM) and Verisign (VRSN). Although there's no way to know for sure, it seems quite plausible that their PM's took advantage of the dip in VRSN shares after the government nixed the company's proposal to raise prices on their contract with ICANN. Shares have since rebounded nicely from those levels. Lone Pine Capital's Steve Mandel has been bullish on VRSN, even with the government's ruling, as he feels the company can still grow at a steady rate. VRSN was listed earlier as a hedge fund consensus buy in the quarter.

In news since quarter close, Buffett took part in a deal with 3G Capital to buy Heinz. Berkshire will not have an operating role in the company, as it looks instead to be a place to park cash.

While a plethora of hedge fund managers were exiting shares of Apple (AAPL) in the fourth quarter, David Einhorn stepped in to buy common stock and a new position in call options. Greenlight's original cost basis was around $248 per share so even with AAPL's recent fall, he's still up on his original position. However, shares have continued to fall since his recent purchase. Einhorn has been pushing Apple management to adopt more shareholder friendly capital allocation strategies. In particular, he's been pushing for the company to issue a perpetual preferred security. Greenlight has called for AAPL shareholders to vote against proposal 2 at the company's meeting. While AAPL has heard Einhorn out, it seems somewhat unlikely that his idea will come to fruition as the company already shot down the idea once last year.

Vodafone (VOD) is listed as a 'new position' on the next page, but longtime readers will know that Einhorn has actually owned VOD for quite some time. He's owned the UK shares long-term (which the SEC does not require disclosure of). His purchase of the American Depositary Receipt (ADR) shares traded in the US is a brand new development. So the takeaway here is that he was adding to his stake, but it is by no means a new position, as he's owned the company for some time via VOD's domestic UK shares. In fact, Vodafone is one of his top five largest positions.

Greenlight outlined their thesis on this name in their fourth quarter letter to investors: "It appears that the market is placing no value on VOD's 45% stake in Verizon Wireless ... For years, Verizon used its control to try to starve VOD by refusing to allow Verizon Wireless to pay dividends ... Excluding any contribution from Verizon Wireless, VOD stock pays a 7% dividend and trades at less than 12x cash earnings – roughly in line with other large European telecom companies. Meanwhile, VOD has never become dependent on Verizon Wireless distributions. Given the huge valuation disparity between what the market thinks Verizon Wireless is worth to Verizon (at least a couple hundred billion dollars) and what it ascribes to VOD (about zero), combined with Verizon's increasing dependence on Verizon Wireless, it wouldn't surprise us if Verizon decided to buy all of VOD to gain full ownership control of Verizon Wireless." Shares of VOD have continued to sell off thus far in 2013, so it will be interesting to see if Einhorn adds to his position further.

Greenlight returned 7.9% in 2012 and has seen 19.4% annualized returns. Einhorn's fourth quarter letter to investors revealed that the hedge fund had covered their short position in Pitney Bowes (PBI), labeling the company a 'metling ice cube.' Many other hedgies have been short this name due to the secular decline of US postal mail volumes.

Lone Pine was quite active with their portfolio in the fourth quarter, headlined by a few major moves. First, they completely sold out of Apple (AAPL), one of their previous sizable stakes. Priceline.com (PCLN) and Google (GOOG) remain their two largest US listed longs, and they were out buying even more shares of each during the quarter (especially GOOG). Steve Mandel's firm had an appetite for shares of dollar stores such as Dollar General (DG) and Dollar Tree (DLTR), acquiring increased stakes in each. Their DG position is slightly larger at $588 million (compared to $478 million for DLTR). Based on the 13G that Lone Pine also filed with the SEC in December, it appears as though Lone Pine was buying DLTR around the $38-39 level, not much lower from where shares currently trade. Additionally, DG shares have lingered around similar areas Lone Pine was theoretically buying at.

Last quarter's issue of Hedge Fund Wisdom highlighted Mandel's thesis on Versign (VRSN). He outlined how that even if the company wasn't granted price increases on its contracts, that downside was still limited. Well, the government indeed did not allow a price increase and shares sold off for a few days. While some hedge fund managers exited their stakes on this news, the majority of hedgies covered in this newsletter were out buying, including Lone Pine. Mandel added to his position by around 56%.

Rounding out the list of additional notable buys, Lone Pine joined many other funds in adding a stake in Facebook (FB), a consensus buy among hedgies in the fourth quarter. Realogy (RLGY) was another name many hedgies disclosed new stakes in, as the company completed its initial public offering (IPO).

Since the close of the fourth quarter, Lone Pine has continued to add to its position in Charter Communications (CHTR). Even after their sizable purchases in Q4 (boosting their stake by over 1,300%), Lone Pine acquired even more shares and now has a 7.1% ownership stake in the company with 7,216,285 shares as of January 24th.

In international activity, Lone Pine reduced its Esprit (HK:330) stake down to 10.88% of the company.

Marvell Technology (MRVL)

mentioned. Signs of this happening are already evident as inflows to equity funds at the start of the year were higher than they have been in quite some time.

As far as specific picks go, the Appaloosa manager touted Citigroup (C), noting that it potentially has 50% upside as he feels the company's foreign business is very valuable. He's also bullish on airlines. Hedge Fund Wisdom highlighted how Tepper was building airline positions in past issues. The hedge fund manager highlights a few reasons to be bullish on the sector: a potential strong dollar scenario, oil prices remaining largely flat (due to new discoveries), as well as a consolidating industry (US Airways and American Airlines are set to merge). He's looking for some airlines to start returning capital as well. His largest airline equity stake is United (UAL) at $213 million, followed by US Airways (LCC) at $162 million, and then Delta (DAL) at $122 million.

Turning to recent activity, the biggest takeaway is that while the majority of other hedge funds were selling Apple (AAPL) shares, Appaloosa was out buying in a big way. They boosted the amount of shares they own by 75% during the quarter and it's now their top disclosed US equity long. Their brand new stake in HCA (HCA) is also worth highlighting as other hedge funds were buying the for-profit hospital too.

Lastly, if there was any doubt about Tepper's bullishness, take this as an example: a 756% increase in his position in the SPDR S&P 500 (SPY) exchange traded fund, now his 13th largest holding. He's certainly put his money where his mouth is.

David Tepper gave two rare interviews (one in December and one in January) where he shared how he's viewing this market. He sees "a lot" of upside in equity markets for a few different reasons. First, he says there's a "pretty good economy, growing 2% give or take" with tailwinds in housing and autos. Second, he pointed out how the Federal Reserve is focused on unemployment. Third, he thinks Europe's situation is not as bad as others fear mainly because European Central Bank President Mario Draghi can lower interest rates really whenever he wants to, something Tepper feels many others didn't really pay attention to. As such, he says you have "a series of puts over in Europe" via central bank action if needed.

Tepper points out that there's a 12-13 handle on the S&P, noting that, "it's cheap relative to everything, it's the only market that hasn't really rose to new heights." He made these comments in December and the market has obviously rallied since then. But in his interview in January, Tepper reiterated his bullish stance, pointing toward retail investors (and more importantly) pensions that are incredibly underweight equities. So he feels there will be a shift into the asset class, something Bridgewater Associates' Ray Dalio has also

Key Takeaways

Sold Out:

Alexander & Baldwin (ALEX)

Bill Ackman made literally only two changes to his portfolio during the fourth quarter on the long side. He sold completely out of Alexander & Baldwin (ALEX) and reduced his position in Procter & Gamble (PG) call options by 32%. The lack of trading activity is not to say he wasn't busy though, that's for sure. The big story from Pershing Square Management is that they've revealed a short position in Herbalife (HLF). In fact, they have an "enormous" short position according to Ackman, over 20 million shares that they started shorting around nine months ago. Ackman presented the idea in a 334-slide presentation entitled "Who wants to be a millionaire?" (which you can view here). In it, he flat out calls the multi-level marketing company a ponzi scheme. Shares of Herbalife plunged from $40 down to $25 on the news of his short position. This steep decline prompted Dan Loeb's Third Point (a hedge fund profiled later in this issue) to step in and establish a long position in Herbalife. Loeb applies a 10-12x earnings multiple and suggested HLF shares are worth $55-68 and pointed out the substantial short interest as a potential for a squeeze in the future.

HLF has traded like a rollercoaster, quickly rebounding from the Ackman-presentation-lows to as high as $46 over the course of a month. Then a little over a week later, shares dropped to $31 on FTC investigation fears. Most recently, HLF has rallied yet again to where it presently trades around $38. The multi-level marketing company has struck back, defending itself against Ackman's claims. Ackman then addressed their statement and asked more questions of his own, in a follow-up entitled 'Questions for Herbalife' which you can view here.

But it gets even more interesting. Billionaire and activist investor Carl Icahn last week filed a 13D with the SEC revealing that he has a whopping total economic interest in HLF of 14,015,151 shares, around 13% of the company. The vast majority of his position is via long call options and short put options (the equivalent of being long the stock). His filing indicates that he will seek to talk to management about a recapitalization or going-private transaction. One detail that's worth highlighting here is that Ackman and Icahn had a very public spat on television. It's clear they do not like each other. While Icahn bought some of his position before the end of 2012, the crazy thing here is that Icahn bought the overwhelming majority of his HLF stake after his argument with Ackman. It's quite obvious he's trying to squeeze Ackman. It will be interesting to see how this one plays out, as it's obviously far from over. HLF is analyzed later in this issue.

For something a bit lighter, Ackman did a video for Floating University entitled 'Everything You Need to Know About Finance and Investing In Under an Hour' which you can view here.

still trading around the same range where Maverick could have purchased in Q4. Last quarter's issue of the newsletter also drew attention to Maverick's new (at the time) buy of Express Scripts (ESRX). They were out buying even more shares again in the fourth quarter, ramping up their stake by 57% as it is now their fourth largest holding.

Maverick has launched a 'Maverick Select' fund that traded internal capital last year and began accepting new capital this year. It has fees of 2.25% for management and 22.5% for performance (or the common 2/20 in exchange for a 3 year lockup). The fund is said to be capped at $1 billion and is a concentrated portfolio of 15-20 longs and 15-20 shorts. What's interesting is they've almost taken a quantitative approach as they're using their proprietary MavRank system to determine which most highly ranked stocks make the cut. The system takes stocks in their main portfolio and ranks them based on potential risk and return. At the recent Morgan Stanley Breakers Conference, Ainslie said that "new capital has very different expectations" as they're almost conditioned to desire lower volatility and lower returns. Ainslie also feels that the hedge fund industry will produce above average returns over the next few years.

Shifting to some of Maverick's short positions, recent European regulation on disclosures of short positions has forced many hedge funds to reveal their once hidden gems. In November, Maverick disclosed that it was short -2.22% of Elekta in Sweden, -0.98% of Delhaize Group in Belgium, as well as the following companies in Finland: -1.7% Nokia, -2.8% Outotec, and -1.53% Stora Enso.

Lee Ainslie's hedge fund firm Maverick Capital saw its flagship fund return 16% in 2012 while its levered fund surged 32% on the year. In portfolio activity from the fourth quarter, the firm sold completely out of its old stake in Citigroup (C), which is notable due to its previous size as a core investment. They essentially replaced that with brand new positions in EMC (EMC) as well as Crown Castle (CCI). Another big takeaway from their portfolio is the fact that Macy's (M) is now their largest holding. After starting a large new stake in the third quarter, they continued to buy shares in the fourth quarter to ramp up their position size, as it's now a $294 million stake. Shares are currently targets range from $35 to $84 ... Using conservative assumptions, we see Tesoro generating about $9 per share in annual excess FCF on a normalized basis and our expectation is that shares can double from the current price of $40.” TSO shares have jumped even higher to $54.

Third Point’s thesis on their new position in Morgan Stanley is as follows: “We believe (it) is in the early stages of a turnaround ... our enthusiasm about MS’s turnaround benefits from our generally constructive macro views. We expect CEO confidence to rise and global corporate activity levels to increase markedly in 2013. Morgan Stanley, with its sterling reputation, talent pool, and record in execution in investment banking advisory and capital markets, is uniquely positioned to benefit from this improvement. Assuming Wealth Management pre-tax margins improve to 20% by 2014, Morgan Stanley’s earnings profile will shift toward a 50/50 split between cyclical, capital intensive capital markets businesses and a stable, capital-light Wealth Management business. This should lead to multiple expansion towards 12-13x on projected earnings of approximately $3 per share driven by the Wealth Management margin improvement, FICC restructuring initiatives, and a stronger corporate activity environment. The combination of these factors suggests Morgan Stanley shares should nearly double from the recent $20 level.” Third Point acquired their stake in MS at an average cost of $16.77 per share.

Third Point’s Offshore Fund finished 2012 up 21.2% and they’ve had higher net long equity exposure for a few months now. In November, they were 27.7% net long equities and at the end of January, they were 37.8% net long. Dan Loeb’s fourth quarter letter to investors shed some light on his thesis on brand new investments in Tesoro (TSO) and Morgan Stanley (MS). Regarding TSO, Third Point writes, “Tesoro has several characteristics we like in an investment: 1) significant hidden value in high-multiple assets like retail, pipelines, and General Partner interests; 2) impending transactions/projects that are underappreciated by the market; and 3) a shareholder-friendly management team focused on creating value. While it is perhaps unusual to invest in a company following a quarter (Q3 2012) in which the stock appreciated by ~68%, we believe Tesoro remains misunderstood by the market; as evidence, current sell-side analyst price quarters. Blue Ridge's purchase of shares of Virgin Media (VMED) was also well-timed as the company recently received a buyout bid from Liberty Global (LBTYA), a company which the hedge fund also owns shares of.

For-profit hospitals were a consensus buy by hedge funds this past quarter and Tenet Healthcare (THC) and HCA (HCA) were the two most popular choices. Blue Ridge bid on shares of both during the fourth quarter. While they previously owned HCA, they boosted their position size by 36% and it's their largest exposure to this theme. That said, they also initiated a brand new holding in THC as well.

Shifting back to some portfolio sales, it is worth highlighting that John Griffin's firm almost cut its position in Verisign (VRSN) in half. This was previously a decent sized core investment for them. While this move could have simply been a risk management measure after the company wasn't allowed to raise prices in a contract renewal, it will be interesting to see if they continue to hold shares next quarter. VRSN has seen swings from $48 down to $34 and back up to its current level of around $46 over the past few months.

Recent European regulations have forced hedge funds to disclose some of their short positions. As such, searching through databases reveals that at the end of November, Blue Ridge was short -0.82% of KGHM in Poland, -1.82% of Pandora in Denmark, -4.47% of Vestas Wind Systems in Denmark, as well as -1.34% of Nokia in Finland.

John Griffin's hedge fund firm trimmed two of its former top holdings in the fourth quarter, selling 19% of its Apple (AAPL) stake (previously their top position) as well as 30% of their Amazon.com (AMZN) position. On the buying side, Blue Ridge did have an appetite for some other shares. Dollar stores were a favorite buy among hedge funds in the fourth quarter and Blue Ridge was no exception as they increased their position size in Dollar Tree (DLTR) by 40%, as it's now their eighth largest US disclosed long. Previous issues of the newsletter also flagged the hedge fund's past purchases of Owens Corning (OC). They continued to buy shares of this name for the third consecutive quarter, slowly amassing a larger position size. Additionally, after initiating new stakes in Equinix (EQIX) and Time Warner (TWX) in the third quarter, they almost doubled their position in both the datacenter company and the media conglomerate in the fourth quarter as well. Both of these stocks have been consensus hedge fund buys in recent Paulson has numerous funds each pursuing different strategies, you have to keep that in consideration when viewing his entire portfolio (because it's a melting pot of all his funds' holdings combined). For example, a lot of Paulson's new buys listed in the column to the left are risk arbitrage plays held in his hedge fund that pursues his legacy strategy of merger arbitrage. Softbank is buying 70% of Sprint Nextel (S). Additionally, both Plains Exploration & Production (PXP) and McMoRan Exploration (MMR) are being bought out by Freeport McMoran (FCX), all of which Paulson acquired in the fourth quarter. Nexen (NXY), a position Paulson added to by 321% in the quarter, recently received both Canadian and US regulatory approval for its transaction as CNOOC is set to take over the company.

In other portfolio activity, Realogy (RLGY) recently completed its initial public offering, but Paulson actually already had a stake. The hedge fund firm owned 11% Series A, B, and C Convertible Senior Subordinated Notes due 2018 that they agreed to convert into shares of common stock during RLGY's IPO. Realogy owns the well-known real estate brokerage brands Coldwell Banker and Century 21, among others. Apollo Global Management originally took the company private in an ill-timed move back in 2007, but now the company is publicly traded again. Paulson originally received around 11.8 million shares from this transaction and their latest portfolio disclosure reveals that they now own 13.3 million RLGY shares, so it looks as though they've acquired some additional shares along the way.

John Paulson's investment firm manages around $20 billion but the poor performance streak looks to have continued. His Advantage Plus fund was down 19% in 2012, largely due to bets that the European sovereign-debt crisis would worsen. His regular Advantage fund was down 14%. Additionally, his bullish bets on gold stocks didn't fare too well. Paulson's Gold Fund was down 25% in 2012 (after being down 11% in 2011). His other funds, however, were up for 2012. Paulson Enhanced finished up 18%, Credit Opportunities finished up 9.1% and his Recovery Fund finished 2012 up 3.9%. Given the poor performance of his larger funds, it should come as no surprise that assets under management have fallen from two years ago as he's seen redemptions.

Turning to Paulson & Co's latest portfolio activity, it's always worth a reminder that since optionality, he thinks ADT should increase leverage and improve capital allocation. He calls ADT an “equity shrink story waiting to happen.” As you’ll see throughout this issue, ADT popped up on a number of hedge fund portfolio sheets in the fourth quarter. Some received the shares from the Tyco spin, while others purchased post-spin.

Aside from that purchase, Tiger also started a position in Berkshire Hathaway (BRK-B) that is intriguing given that Tiger usually likes secular theme plays versus value conglomerates. The hedge fund also drastically ramped up its position in Carnival (CCL). The cruise line recently saw one of its ships catch fire and canceled 12 cruises so it will be interesting to see the impact that has on potential travelers going forward and if it influences Tiger’s position sizing. The hedge fund also initiated a new holding in credit card company Capital One (COF). This is largely seen as an economic recovery play as it benefits from increased consumer spending. The company is profiled later in the equity analysis section. Tiger also owns payment processors Mastercard (MA) and Visa (V), which have been longstanding positions. Tiger slightly reduced each holding during the fourth quarter.

As for how Julian Robertson invests, he says he focuses on management and notes that you have to give them time. He’s a long-term investor and doesn’t focus on short-term gyrations.

While the third quarter marked a time of little portfolio activity for Tiger Management, the fourth quarter was exactly the opposite. Tiger made numerous moves, the most notable of which would be a brand new position in ADT (ADT), which is now their largest position. ADT was spun-off from the Tyco conglomerate and sells home security and monitoring systems. A highly fragmented industry, ADT is one of the few companies that has any sizable market share. Corvex Capital, an investment firm run by former Carl Icahn protégé Keith Meister, has taken an activist position in ADT and is looking for the company to improve its business and create more shareholder value. He feels that ADT has a defensive and predictable business model with consistent cash flows. Meister likes the underappreciated secular growth tailwinds and points to the shares mispricing after the spin mainly because the company doesn’t have many public comps. Another reason for the mispricing he says is the poor capital structure, a central part of his investment thesis. Pointing to balance sheet by far is that they added to their pre-existing stake in Citigroup (C) by 435% during the quarter as it's now their fourth largest disclosed holding and largest pure equity stake in US markets. As detailed earlier in this issue, David Tepper also fancies this financial stock, noting that there's great value in the company's international operations. The second biggest takeaway from Soros Fund's activity is that they reduced their position in American International Group (AIG) by 41% during Q4. Even after the reduction, it's still their fourth largest US long, worth over $312 million. AIG has been a hedge fund favorite the past few quarters as the government has completely exited the stake it took in the company during the financial crisis bailout. Soros Fund does seem to be bullish on moneycenter banks because in addition to the Citigroup stake, they also added significantly to their position in JPMorgan Chase (JPM) as well, ramping up the stake to the tune of 162%. And sticking with financials in general, they also initiated a position in another financial: Morgan Stanley (MS). The thesis on this name was outlined earlier in this issue in Dan Loeb's section (Third Point). And while so many investors were reducing their stakes in technology giant Apple (AAPL) during the quarter, Soros Fund utilized the opportunity as a chance to more than double their share count.

To learn from this great investor, it's definitely worth checking out George Soros' best investment advice.

Before viewing Soros Fund Management's latest portfolio activity, it's worth reiterating that since the fund holds so many different positions, the newsletter only tracks the upper echelon of the portfolio, i.e. around the top 90 positions. To illustrate the size of the portfolio turnover, here's a snapshot of the overall activity over the past quarter just in US markets: Soros Fund made 71 new purchases, added on to 44 existing positions, sold completely out of 70 stakes, and reduced positions in 39 holdings. After all, the hedge fund has turned into a family office to manage George Soros' fortune of billions and holds all different types of positions in various asset classes all across the world. In fact, it's been reported that Soros recently made $1 billion dollars betting against the Japanese Yen. So when viewing Soros' portfolio on the next page, keep in mind this is only one small slice of the overall assets under management pie. Not to mention, many positions Soros Fund holds in the US are actually notes or convertible bonds rather than equity stakes.

So, the biggest takeaway from their portfolio upheld by the Supreme Court, there was still speculation as to Obamacare's future given that the presidential election was right around the corner at the time. When Obama was re-elected, shares of the for-profit hospitals spiked higher the day after. Past issues of the newsletter have highlighted Larry Robbins' thesis on for-profit hospitals as his hedge fund Glenview Capital has nailed this trade and profited handsomely from it. While he owns a myriad of hospital stocks, his largest position is in Tenet, followed by HCA.

Turning to some of Bridger's other key portfolio maneuvers, Mignone started a brand new position in United Rentals (URI). This company was featured in the equity analysis section of a past Hedge Fund Wisdom issue for its secular tailwinds. It's also worth pointing out that Mignone's firm sold almost 30% of its stake in CareFusion (CFN). This is the second quarter in a row they've made such a sale. The newsletter has flagged this name over the past few issues as hedge funds that previously held a long-term position have been selling (Greenlight Capital among others). While Bridger still continues to own it, it's a much smaller position for them than it used to be. Apart from that, the other takeaway from Bridger's equity book is that they over doubled their position in Herbalife (HLF), presumably taking advantage of the swoon in shares that was caused by Bill Ackman's presentation on shorting the company.

Robert Mignone's Bridger Management has typically focused on healthcare plays, but this quarter none of their top five holdings are from that sector. However, recent portfolio activity in the quarter brought two healthcare stocks awfully close to cracking the top five. For-profit hospitals were by far the biggest bet made by Bridger during the fourth quarter as they added to their position in Tenet Healthcare (THC) by 425% and HCA (HCA) by 221%. These are now their sixth and seventh largest positions, respectively. In general, for-profit hospitals have been accumulated by hedge funds over the past quarter, with the majority of managers buying the big players THC and HCA. While President Obama saw the Affordable Care Act

Lee Cooperman's Omega Advisors made some intriguing portfolio moves in the fourth quarter. One of the biggest was his sale of Apple (AAPL), previously his fifth largest position. In a recent interview, he said he feels that competitor Samsung is pressuring Apple and he was also frustrated with the company's large cash position not being returned to shareholders. Cooperman prefers investing in Qualcomm (QCOM), a chipmaker that is not tied to just Apple and instead benefits from the rise of 3G/4G smartphones. He also likes Google (GOOG).

In other moves, Omega Advisors also bought shares of Freeport McMoran (FCX). Cooperman says he took advantage of the dip in shares after the company announced its acquisition of McMoRan Exporation (MMR), another company Cooperman has a stake in. He's labeled FCX as one of his top picks for 2013. Last quarter's newsletter flagged Cooperman's pick of MMR at the Great Investors' Best Ideas conference and the company was bought out soon after. Right after the buyout was announced, Cooperman added to his MMR stake.

In the fourth quarter, Cooperman also initiated a brand new position in SandRidge Energy (SD). The natural gas company has been under siege from activist investor TPG-Axon Capital. Omega jumped in with a pretty sizable stake worth $154 million as it's now their seventh largest US listed long. One other buy worth drawing attention to is Express Scripts (ESRX). Omega already owned a pre-existing position, but added to it during the quarter (+38%). Numerous other funds profiled in HFW were also out buying shares.

Looking at the bigger picture for equities as a whole, the fund manager said that the Federal Reserve's quantitative easing has made stocks an extremely attractive investment, especially in comparison to bonds with low yields. In terms of foreign positions, Cooperman revealed in a recent interview that he likes Qualicorp (a Brazilian healthcare play) and Tetragon Financial Group. Additionally, his hedge fund has disclosed a new position in London listed Monitise per trading on January 10th. Omega owns 5.65% of Monitise's voting rights.

Philippe Laffont

Manages a long/short fund focused on technology, media, & telecom

One of his mantras is "dare to be different"

Key Takeaways

New Positions:

Netflix (NFLX)
CBS (CBS)
Charter Communications (CHTR)
eBay (EBAY)
Groupon (GRPN)
Herbalife (HLF)

Sold Out:

Chipotle (CMG)
H&R Block (HRB)
Polo Ralph Lauren (RL)
Best Buy (BBY)
Intuit (INTU)
Qualcomm (QCOM)

added to that position again in the fourth quarter by around 62%. It's now their seventh largest holding. This quarter they also initiated a new position in Charter Communications (CHTR ~ US cable) as well.

Big media is the other big driver of Coatue's portfolio. Their third largest position is now Time Warner (TWX). Last quarter's issue flagged Coatue's big new buy, as it was a consensus hedge fund addition then. They continued buying TWX in Q4, ratcheting up their stake an additional 202%. This stock saw a sizable amount of buying by hedge funds for the second consecutive quarter. Continuing with the media theme, Coatue also owns big pieces of News Corp (NWSA), Viacom (VIAB), and a new position in CBS (CBS).

Given Coatue's expertise on technology, it should come as no surprise that they're expanding their investing reach to non-public companies as well. It's been revealed that the firm is launching a $300 million fund to invest in pre-IPO startup companies. Coatue is expanding their focus by establishing an office in California (Menlo Park) to operate out of. Philippe Laffont's brother, Thomas Laffont, will head up the operation. In addition to Coatue's new fund, they're also able to invest ~10% of their existing hedge fund capital in private companies. So theoretically, they could easily invest $1 billion in startups should they so choose. Coatue has already completed one private funding transaction: Box.com.

Coatue Management is a quintessential TMT hedge fund (technology, media, telecom) and cable/broadband is one of the biggest themes in their portfolio. Liberty Global (LBTYA ~ European cable) is their fourth largest position. The company recently announced it was acquiring Virgin Media (VMED ~ UK cable). Coatue just so happens to own VMED as well. In fact, it's their second largest holding. While their stakes in both companies were essentially unchanged in the fourth quarter, Coatue just filed a 13G with the SEC disclosing that they've just ramped up their position size in Liberty Global by another 23% as of February 5th. Founder Philippe Laffont is a big advocate of allocating a lot of capital to your best ideas and running a more concentrated portfolio. Once the VMED/LBTYA acquisition is completed, this will be quite a large position for Coatue. Their bet on cable is further amplified when you consider they also own Time Warner Cable (TWC ~ US cable). They originally purchased a big position in the third quarter and then they've now

Bruce Berkowitz

Named Morningstar's Fund Manager

Bruce Berkowitz's portfolio is the definition of concentrated. His largest position, American International Group (AIG), is now up to over 43% of his reported assets with a stake worth over $3 billion. He sees the company becoming a profitable insurance business, as they're the price leader. His next largest position is Bank of America (BAC) and he noted in a recent interview that he'd actually like to add to that stake more, but mutual fund regulations prevent him from doing so (Fairholme's primary investment vehicle is mutual fund FAIRX). He also hinted about transitioning to a different type of investment vehicle in the future that would allow him to more easily run concentrated positions, saying "stay tuned." Talking about Bank of America, Berkowitz pointed out how a lot of people are fixated on the Countrywide problem (which BAC inherited by acquiring the company during the financial crisis), but he says great earnings are there and in the future the earnings power will grow as Countrywide's problems subside. Fairholme's third largest position is Sears Holdings (SHLD), which Berkowitz mainly views as a real estate play. This is really the only position he added to during the quarter.

On the selling side of his equity book, Berkowitz did make two significant moves by practically exiting Citigroup (C) and selling 71% of his holdings in CIT Group (CIT). And the only position he did completely sell out of was a stake in General Motors warrants.

Berkowitz recently announced that the Fairholme Fund was closing to new investors, saying, "Less is more. If more money came in, I can't buy more AIG because we're so concentrated ... so I do not want a lot of cash coming in that would potentially dilute those positions for existing shareholders." His fund already has around a 20% cash position, as he likes to keep it on hand to take advantage of any potential future opportunities and in case investors get spooked and decide to redeem (something he's dealt with before).

Berkowitz recently gave an insightful talk at the Columbia Investment Management Conference where he said it's actually a disservice for him to spend time with clients because it takes time away from investment research. He likes to hustle as an investor, always reading company reports and listening to earnings calls. He also emphasized getting away from the Wall Street groupthink and that's partially why he lives in Miami. The Fairholme man also gave a talk at the University of Miami where he touched on his investment approach. He said, "We buy that which is hated. When it's hated, it's usually cheap. We usually are too early, we suffer from premature accumulation... we want to make sure that when we invest in something, that there's a big margin of safety." He likes to focus on the balance sheet, pointing out that there's more ways for companies to cheat on the income statement.

87% from their initial public offering (IPO) as numerous investors shorted the stock due to the company's inability to establish a solid business model. GRPN started as a 'daily deals' company, offering 'Groupons' to its customers for discounts on products and services. This platform had little barriers to entry and competitors emerged such as Google Offers and LivingSocial (which Amazon acquired and has taken numerous write-downs on since). Groupon then entered the highly competitive payments industry when it launched 'Breadcrumb,' a point-of-sale system targeted at restaurants. The company also expanded with 'Groupon Goods,' where they sell physical items and hold the inventory. Some investors long the stock called for CEO and founder Andrew Mason to step down due to his apparent disregard for profitability.

So the question here is what does Tiger Global see in the name? Well, given their purchase price, valuation certainly had to come into play. Around that time, GRPN had around $1.2 billion in cash and a market cap of only $2.2 billion. Shares of GRPN have rallied ferociously from $2.60 up to their current levels of around $5.95.

Other notable portfolio activity from Tiger includes selling almost half of their Yahoo (YHOO) stake, over doubling their exposure to both Amazon.com (AMZN) and W.R. Grace (GRA), as well as starting brand new positions in Fleetcor Technologies (FLT), McGraw Hill (MHP), and Motorola Solutions (MSI). Last, but certainly not least, their new stake in Liberty Media (LMCA) was their largest buy in Q4 and is now their second largest position. The company just completed the spin-off of Starz (STRZA) in January.

Tiger Global has become known for its investments in private technology companies as of late. And in the fourth quarter, they saw two of these positions come full circle. Tiger purchased stakes in both Facebook and LinkedIn, two of social media's top online properties, back when they were both private companies. They reaped vast profits as valuations climbed and these companies eventually came public. And in the fourth quarter, Tiger Global's hedge fund sold its stakes in both. Where Tiger decided to re-invest the proceeds, however, may surprise some people. Chase Coleman's firm had previously owned a tiny stake in Groupon (GRPN), but decided to ramp up their stake dramatically at the beginning of November when shares cratered from $5.25 per share down to as low as $2.75 per share. Tiger amassed a position of 65 million shares and owns around 9.9% of the company. At one point, shares of GRPN were down

Passport Capital manager also said that he's seeing a lot of institutional demand for equities now, as those investors feel that risks in credit have increased. While he says that doesn't necessarily mean that equities will rise, it's important to know how big money managers are thinking with regard to risk in various asset classes.

Turning to Burbank's latest portfolio activity, it's clear that he's bullish on mining as Kinross Gold (KGC) is now his third largest US position after increasing his stake by 51% during the fourth quarter. Passport also started new positions in AngloGold Ashanti (AU) and Gold Fields (GFI). AU has been one of John Paulson's favorite gold mining plays as well. Energy and energy services are also a big theme for Passport as a new position in Schlumberger (SLB) call options is quite large if you consider the notional value of the options ($107 million). Burbank also initiated a new position in Williams Companies (WMB). On the selling side of the equation, Passport reduced exposure to casinos/gaming as they completely exited their stake in Wynn Resorts (WYNN) and sold half of their position in Las Vegas Sands (LVS).

In activity since quarter close, Passport recently filed a 13G with the SEC revealing a brand new position in Yelp (YELP). They own 6.3% of the company with 1,065,261 shares. Robert Karr's Joho Capital also has been adding to its position in YELP recently as well.

In a recent interview, John Burbank said that this is a great time for long/short investing, as some companies will keep growing, while a lot of others will not, so you can take advantage of the dichotomy. As to where he's allocating capital in 2013, he's overweight mining and basic materials due to inefficiencies. Geographically, he says he has the biggest weighting in Saudi Arabia, as it's his favorite emerging market (he has 16-17% of his capital invested there). In particular, he's interested in the domestic economy as it grew 6% last year. The Middle East is a very underbuilt region and he thinks it's being built up at the fastest rate in the world. He feels $25-30 billion dollars will flow into their market once it really opens up to outsiders, because right now there are only very limited ways to invest there. He likens the opportunity in Saudi Arabia to that of India ten years ago. Keep in mind when viewing the next page, that Burbank's international positions won't be reflected. The and this marks the third consecutive quarter that they were out buying shares.

One adjustment Perry made in the quarter involved their stake in BP (BP). They sold 36% of their equity stake and then added to their call options position by 34%. They've bet on the company's turnaround as the uncertainty surrounding the oil spill liability has lifted. Another trade Perry made is actually worth ignoring (yes, you read that right). They almost doubled their exposure to Nexen (NXY) and this was a risk arbitrage play as the company saw a proposed takeover by CNOOC. This trade is worth ignoring, mainly because the merger-arb spread is tiny now that the deal has been granted approval by both the Canadian and US regulatory bodies. NXY will join CNOOC soon and this position will vanish from Perry's portfolio.

Express Scripts (ESRX) was one of the consensus buys listed at the beginning of this issue and Perry likes the fact that it's now the biggest pharmacy benefits manager in the country (after the merger with Medco Health). Over time, they see the company realizing almost $1.4 billion in cost synergies and think that the company can eventually begin share repurchases once they pay down the debt raised to finance the merger.

Last, it's worth highlighting Perry's purchase of more put options on the iShares Russell 2000 Index (IWM). This is obviously for hedging purposes and they often hold index puts. They closed out their S&P 500 index put position in the quarter and instead added to their Russell hedge.

Perry Capital was out adding to a bevy of pre-existing positions in the fourth quarter. American International Group (AIG) continues to be their top position. However, it's now a more concentrated stake as they increased the number of shares they own by 42% during the quarter and it's now 19.38% of their reported US holdings (over a $524 million stake). Lamar Advertising (LAMR) is another position they were buying shares of in Q4 (an increase of 60%). The company announced that it was considering conversion into a real estate investment trust (REIT), which spurred shares higher. Deutsche Bank thinks this conversion could be likely in 2014 and recommended LAMR shares to clients in Q4, noting that they thought valuation at the time did not reflect the full potential upside from REIT conversion. Perry owns 7.4% of the company

Earlier this month, the company reiterated that the strategic review by the board was still ongoing and that they haven't decided on any specific course of action. CEO Greg Lucier said on the company's recent Q4 earnings call that the company actually began its strategic review in the summer of 2012 and that "all ideas are on the table." One Jefferies & Co analyst speculated that a deal could fetch $50 to $60 per share in a leveraged buyout (LBO), while a JPMorgan analyst argued higher prices were possible at $65 to $75. LIFE currently trades around $63 after the current spike.

While the majority of hedge funds that owned Apple in this issue were selling shares in the fourth quarter, Larry Robbins' firm was one of the few that stepped in to buy. They took advantage of the decline to initiate a new position in the technology giant. Another stock Glenview was out buying was J.C. Penney (JCP). The hedge fund boosted their holdings by 64% during Q4 after originally starting their position in Q3. Last, Glenview also bought more General Motors (GM) stock, as it's now a top-15 US holding for them. GM is actually one of the most commonly held stocks among all hedge funds.

Shifting to their selling activity, Robbins cut a third of his McKesson (MCK) stake and this is noteworthy because this has been a longstanding position for his firm as it looks like they've finally locked in some profits.

Larry Robbins' Glenview Capital had an excellent 2012 as his main fund gained over 29% before fees and his smaller 'opportunities' fund gained around 60% before fees. His large bet on for-profit hospitals has been a big contributor to his gains. In the fourth quarter, he was out buying even more shares of these companies. He boosted his holdings in Community Health Systems (CYH) by a whopping 424% in Q4 and it's now his seventh largest US long position. He also added to his Health Management Associates (HMA) stake by 37%. In December, HMA was profiled on an episode of CBS's show '60 Minutes' that called into question the company's admission policies. HMA defended itself ahead of the investigative journalism piece that aired. While shares dropped slightly at the time, they have raced higher in the ensuing months, climbing from $7.25 up to $10.75 as Robbins wins yet again.

Life Technologies (LIFE) continues to be Glenview's largest holding with a $548 million stake. Last month, shares spiked higher when the company said it was exploring a possible sale of itself and retained banks to assist in the process.

at industries/sectors and talking to competitors, suppliers, etc. He talks with management to see how they think about the competitive dynamics of the industry. He likes to bet on a management team that has a view of the underlying dynamics similar to what Viking believes. Halvorsen said he is also fascinated by investors' focus on fees, arguing that instead they should be focusing on the net return after fees. Lastly, he said there are certain macro backdrop risks that are concerning.

After selling part of their position in Priceline.com (PCLN) in the third quarter, Viking Global liquidated the rest of their stake in the fourth quarter. They also exited their Apple (AAPL) stake, something many other managers did during the same timeframe. Last quarter's issue of Hedge Fund Wisdom drew attention to the fact that Viking had decided to allocate more capital to its technology, media & telecom team. That decision is expressed mainly via increased positions in media companies. Viking's top holding is Time Warner (TWX) as they boosted their stake by 45% in Q4. They also added to their position in News Corp (NWSA), their second largest position.

In the financial sector, Capital One Financial (COF) has drawn Viking's attention, as it's now their fourth largest position after they bought more shares. COF is featured later in this issue's equity analysis section. In activity since the end of Q4, Viking has disclosed that they now own 5.3% of Michael Kors (KORS) with over 10.6 million shares as of February 8th (an increase over what they reported on the next page).

Viking Global's founder Andreas Halvorsen spoke at the Milken Institute where he said that good management teams are extremely underappreciated in their ability to take market share, even in low growth environments. He equally believes poor management teams are underappreciated in that they can destroy things quicker than you think. He says Viking focuses on finding the winners and losers. On the topic of shorting stocks, Halvorsen noted that it's a "heartwrenching activity, because you can lose a lot of money doing it." He takes a defensive approach there, saying that you can't short a bunch of the underperforming stocks because the risk is too high if you're wrong. And when you are wrong, "you have to get out very quickly, which means you can't have very large positions." The Viking manager says that you have to have patience in any business, and hedge funds are no different. As to how Viking approaches investing, he notes they start by looking Brand new positions for Andrew Spokes' firm (recall Farallon founder Thomas Steyer is stepping down) include Dollar General (DG) and EMC (EMC). Dollar stores as a whole saw buying activity from numerous managers profiled in the newsletter (DG and Dollar Tree (DLTR) were the two most popular). It looks like Farallon took advantage of the big slide in shares and stepped in once they saw that valuation was cheap.

Media was a sector that Farallon was out allocating capital to in the fourth quarter as well. They boosted their existing stake in News Corp (NWSA) and started a brand new position in Walt Disney (DIS). The thesis on DIS is that the company has finally finished a long cycle of capital expenditure on its Parks segment and could see margin expansion soon. Children's Investment Fund in the UK believes that DIS is entering a "multiyear growth and re-rating phase" and think a long-term transfer of economics is underway from distributors to content providers.

Recent European regulatory rules have forced hedge funds to disclose short positions over a certain size. After searching the databases, it was revealed that Farallon was short -1.18% of Icon in Ireland as of the end of November.

Last year, Farallon was ranked one of the top ten hedge funds by net gains since inception with a $12.2 billion net gain since 1987.

Last quarter's section on Farallon Capital highlighted their merger arbitrage play on Nexen (NXY). During the fourth quarter, the spread widened before regulatory approval was eventually granted by Canadian and US authorities. The deal will close soon and NXY will vanish from Farallon's portfolio, as they'll move on to the next risk arbitrage opportunity. One such play in their portfolio from the fourth quarter is McMoRan Exploration (MMR). The company received a somewhat surprising takeover bid from Freeport McMoran (FCX). Prior to the bid, MMR shares were languishing. FCX will acquire MMR for $3.4 billion in cash. Upon closing, MMR shareholders will also receive units in a distribution from a royalty trust which will have a 5% interest on future

The Reporting Persons intend to have discussions with management of the Issuer regarding the business and strategic alternatives to enhance shareholdervalue, such as a recapitalization or a going-private transaction.”

As detailed earlier in this issue, Bill Ackman of Pershing Square Capital laid out a detailed case for shorting the company in December, calling it a pyramid scheme. Dan Loeb of Third Point responded by going long and defending the company in his quarterly letter. Now, Carl Icahn has jumped into the ring. Icahn and Ackman actually had a very public argument on television on CNBC and it's very apparent that the two don't get along. Given the timing of Icahn's purchase (post-television fight), it's worth wondering whether Icahn is doing this mainly to spite Ackman and to try and squeeze him out of his short position (thus costing him tons of money). Herbalife (HLF) is analyzed in-depth in the equity analysis section later on.

Everyone's favorite corporate activist was active yet again in the fourth quarter. The main takeaways are that he completely exited his prior position in OshKosh (OSK) and started a brand new position in Transocean (RIG). Additionally, he beefed up his stake in Netflix, over tripling his position. And, he's already made a ton of money on that stake as NFLX shares have skied from around $53 up to current levels of $189. According to Institutional Investor's Alpha, Icahn Partners returned an estimated 22.4% in 2012. This comes on the heels of a 28% return in 2011, an 11.4% return in 2010, a 24.75% return in 2009, and a (35.6)% return in 2008. Overall, Icahn Partners has seen average annual returns of 12.75%. If you invested $100 with Icahn at the beginning of 2005, you'd now have $223.

In activity since quarter end, Icahn has initiated another new position: Herbalife (HLF). Icahn filed an activist 13D with the SEC due to trading activity on February 4th. However, reading the fine print on the filing details that Icahn was buying over various dates (as early as December 20th and as recent as February 14th). He now owns 12.98% of the company with 14,015,151 shares. This share count includes common stock as well as numerous call option positions. In fact, the vast majority of Icahn's stake was built via options. In the filing, Icahn notes that, "The Reporting Persons have conducted significant analysis with respect to JANA Partners did a significant amount of buying in the fourth quarter. They started a sizable stake in Copart (CPRT), over tripled their exposure to QEP Resources (QEP), and over doubled their exposure to Liberty Interactive Ventures (LVNTA). LVNTA is the tracking stock created by John Malone that was spun-off to shareholders of Liberty Interactive (LINTA). LVNTA tracks Liberty's ownership stakes in various companies such as Expedia, TripAdvisor and more. It seems plausible that JANA would accumulate a stake in these shares due to a potential disparity between LVNTA's valuation and the collective valuation of all the stakes Liberty holds in other companies. As of the end of the fourth quarter, JANA owned 5.93% of LVNTA shares. JANA also owns a LINTA position, but cut it almost in half during Q4.

JANA's Barry Rosenstein and Scott Ostfeld recently gave an interview to Columbia Business School's Graham & Doddsville where they talked about their investment style. Rosenstein says one of the most important lessons he's learned is to not blink when taking risks and to remain fearless.

JANA typically focuses on activist investing and he commented on how this impacts portfolio construction: "Our highest conviction ideas are the ideas where we have the most impact on the outcome. Those are our activist ideas ... In our approach, we're extremely disciplined. I don't want to be only an activist because when you force things the quality of your ideas is diluted. We came up with this rubric we call V-cubed, which is value, votes, and variety of ways to win. Basically, we have to be comfortable buying in at a valuation that provides us with a margin of safety, irrespective of any activism we will attempt to initiate and that may be unsuccessful. In my experience, if you have all three of those checked off, you're guaranteed victory. If you're missing one of them, there's a good chance you're going to lose. We're extremely judicious."

Highlighting some additional portfolio activity from JANA, the hedge fund launched a position in Fifth and Pacific (FNP) during the fourth quarter. This is the former Liz Claiborne company and houses the popular Kate Spade brand as well as Juicy Couture. There has been speculation that FNP will put the latter brand up for sale or change its management team. Rosenstein's team also initiated positions in ADT (ADT) and VeriSign (VRSN), two hedge fund favorites as of late.

stake after bailing the company out during the financial crisis.

Pennant also added 47% to their small position in Vivus (VVUS) that they originally started in the third quarter. This position is most likely sized small to reflect the risk/reward in shares. Vivus is a pharmaceutical company that had Qsymia (a new weight loss drug) approved by the FDA. The stock soared when this happened, but then plummeted back down once initial prescription data was released. With a large portion of the American population considered overweight or obese, there is certainly a large opportunity for the drug to gain traction. Some investors feel Vivus would perform better under the wing of a larger pharmaceutical company. The risks involved are patent risk, possibility that Doctors could prescribe alternative generics, and the fact that Vivus is really just a one-drug company so it's either a home run or go home. Vivus is spending cash and lacks a true big pharma marketing partner for the drug as well. John Burbank's Passport Capital also holds a position in VVUS (and was buying again in the fourth quarter as well). It's currently a much bigger position for him though as it's his fourth largest US long.

Pennant Capital is usually the epitome of lower turnover and often has little portfolio activity on a quarter over quarter basis. However, this time around Pennant was quite active for the first time in a while. The most notable transaction in their portfolio was almost doubling their stake in MRC Global (MRC). This is a name you don't really see any other prominent hedge funds owning, so it seems to be somewhat of a contrarian pick. Pennant is the company's second largest institutional shareholder. MRC is a holding company, formerly known as McJunkin Red Man Holding Company. They distribute pipes, valves, and fittings as well as various services to the energy industry. The company has a market cap of $3.25 billion

Pennant started a stake in Cognizant Technology Solutions (CTSH) in the third quarter and continued to accumulate shares in the fourth quarter. In fact, they came close to doubling their position and it's now in their top twenty holdings. Alan Fournier's hedge fund firm also made a new purchase of American International Group (AIG) shares as the government finally exited its ownership

- Market valuation
- Potential catalysts (if any)
- Hedge fund activity in the stock

This quarter's write-ups include:

1. Investment Thesis Summary of Capital One Financial (COF): Disappointing Q4 results may present a buying opportunity, though low interest rates, consumer deleveraging, and increasing regulatory oversight may continue to pressure results and constrain growth.

Since publication, this pick is up over 31%

Since publication, this pick is up over 72%

Overview

Disappointing fourth quarter results may present a buying opportunity, though low interest rates, consumer deleveraging, and increasing regulatory oversight may continue to pressure results and constrain growth.

Hedge Fund Activity

Lone Pine Capital and Third Point started new positions in Capital One (COF) with 4.4 million and 900,000 shares respectively. Soros Fund doubled their position to 1.3 million shares and Viking Global increased its position in COF by 35%.

Company Background

COF is a $300 billion in assets and $20 billion in sales financial institution based in McLean, VA. It is ranked the 11th largest financial holding company based on assets and is focused on consumer lending (primarily credit cards and auto loans).

COF was founded in 1988 by Richard Fairbank, who still runs the company today. The founder brought a high degree of technology and analytics to the lending business, and pioneered the mass marketing of credit cards. The company developed an analytical competitive advantage on asset gathering but lacked a stable funding base, and in the mid-2000s all the growth was in mortgages, so eventually it got into retail banking.

It first bought Hibernia in 2005 to establish a southern franchise, and in 2006 it bought North Fork on the east coast. In 2008, it bought Chevy Chase Bank, and in 2012 it closed the acquisition of ING Direct and the purchase of HSBC's US cards business. Unfortunately, the acquisition of North Fork brought along the GreenPoint mortgage platform, which created significant problems for COF and eventually was shut down.

In the early 2000s, COF was considered a high-growth specialty franchise with a competitive advantage, and was growing rapidly. As a result, it commanded a premium multiple. Since then, along with most financial institutions, its multiple has compressed substantially. The reasons being threefold primarily:

- Investors have become more skeptical about the risks of bank franchises and the opacity of their results
- Continued consumer deleveraging means slow asset growth, or even declining balances in the short term
- Increasing government regulation following the financial crisis and an effort to protect the consumer spell slower growth and lower margins over the longer term

COF was less than half its current size in terms of sales in the early 2000s, but its EPS grew quickly from $4 to almost $7. After the mid-2000s, when it started buying retail-banking franchises, its EPS peaked at almost $8 in 2006 but hasn't quite recovered since. In 2008, it reported a loss, and in 2009 it was only slightly profitable, due to large writedowns primarily related to mortgage exposures. Between 2010-2012, its EPS has been in the $6-7 range, comparable to pre-2005 levels.

Nevertheless, the stock was trading near $90 back in 2005-2006, whereas now it trades in the mid-$50s. It's interesting to note that some financial institutions have actually rebounded to almost peak prices, e.g., JPMorgan and American Express are trading back to their 2006-2007 levels.

Current Situation

In the fourth quarter of 2012, COF traded in the $55-61 range, then it trended higher to almost $63 in early January, and it is currently below the low-point in Q4 at $54. Since October, COF is down 5.2%, whereas Discover (DFS) is down 1.5%, American Express (AXP) is up 8.5%, the KBW Bank Index (BKX) is up 11.2%, and the S&P 500 is up 5.5%. The reason for COF's underperformance was the disappointing fourth quarter results and subsequent sell-side downgrades.

On January 18th, the stock dropped from $62 to $57, in reaction to its earnings release and call after the close on January 17. Reported EPS came in at $1.41 compared to consensus of $1.58 and a "whisper" number closer to $1.65 due to a weaker than expected spread income and higher operating expenses at the bank. COF's margin was weak as it built up cash to redeem $3.6 billion of trust preferred securities. Results in cards declined over the prior quarter, more accurately reflecting the pressures of recent changes in card fees.

Perhaps more importantly though, management gave disappointing top-line guidance, saying that the fourth quarter was representative of what investors should expect for 2013, even though Q4 is a seasonally weak quarter. The company faces the industry-wide issue of softening consumer demand for credit, as well as a persistent very-low interest rate environment.

Additionally, Capital One just agreed to sell its $7 billion Best Buy private label portfolio to Citigroup at approximately book value. The transaction is expected to close in the third quarter of 2013. This portfolio was originally part of the HSBC deal from 2012. Some sell-side analysts are disappointed that COF has lost yet another private label relationship.

Bulls vs. Bears

As the employment picture in the US gradually improves, credit card charge-offs will continue to decline, and card companies' earnings power will eventually shine through.

One way investors look at financial institutions is to calculate the pre-tax pre-provision earnings, and then calculate an earnings power based on normalized loan loss provisions. During crises, credit losses are much higher and banks can earn very little or even lose money, but depending on the trajectory of these losses and whether they might need additional capital in the future, those can be good times to buy at depressed valuations.

Based on the low end of sell-side earnings estimates, COF is expected to have an EPS of $5.79 for 2013 and $6.29 for 2014, a 9% year-over-year growth rate, and the stock is trading at 9.3x forward earnings. Using the mid-point of sell-side analysts' estimates of $6.45 for 2013 and $6.83 for 2014, COF trades at 8.4x forward earnings but the growth is also lower at 6%. The big question is, what is a normalized charge-off rate, and what does the going-forward growth profile of the business look like?

Buyers expect credit quality to improve sooner based on positive employment reports; sellers avoid the stock because of weak growth opportunities and increased uncertainty. 2012 and 2013 continue to be transition years for COF with continued portfolio runoffs, substantial acquisitions – making recent trends less predictive of future performance – and results pressured by purchase accounting adjustments, amortizations and merger-related expenses. On the other hand, COF's restructuring could translate into much higher profitability a few years out.

Hedge Fund Activity

Bill Ackman's Pershing Square in December gave a presentation on why he has a short position in Herbalife (HLF). He has reportedly shorted around 20 million shares, or more than half the total short interest. This presentation caused HLF to plummet and prompted the following hedge fund buying:

Carl Icahn bought 14 million shares (13% of the company). Third Point established a new position in the stock valued at around $120 million (though CNBC is reporting that Third Point recently sold a portion of his position recently). Ken Heebner's Capital Growth Management purchased almost 1 million additional shares. Tiger Consumer increased its position by more than 50%. Visium bought more than 2 million shares and Lone Pine Capital bought calls on HLF.

Company Background

HLF is a multi-level marketing (MLM) company that sells nutritional, weight loss, and other health and beauty products through 2.5 million independent distributors in 88 countries.

In MLM programs, a company sells its products through an independent (instead of a captive) sales force. These independent distributors earn commissions on products sold, and they are recruited through conferences or by other distributors. In addition to marketing the company's products, distributors also market the company itself.

Growth comes from a distributor selling more product, or from a distributor adding other distributors to the system. In order to incentivize this growth, the company pays the recruiter a commission based on the 'downline' distributor's sales.

MLM programs often require that distributors make an investment in the company, e.g., by placing an initial product order and maintaining a certain commitment to make recurring purchases. If downline distributors end up not selling the product, they lose money, which ends up in top-level distributors' pockets, making MLM programs potential pyramid schemes. However, there are many MLM programs that are perfectly legal.

HLF was founded by Mark Hughes in 1980, went public in 1986, and was taken private by JH Whitney and Golden Gate in 2002 for $700 million. In 2003, the president of Walt Disney International, Michael Johnson, became – and currently is – HLF's CEO, in preparation of going public in 2004.

Since it IPO'd in late 2004, HLF has grown from $1.2bn to $3.9bn in sales, its gross margin has been stable at 80%, but operating margin has improved from 9% to 16%. As a result, EPS has increased from less than $0.50 to $4. Over the same period, its stock price has grown from $7 (the split adjusted IPO price) to a high of $72 in April 2012. After a low of $26 in late December 2012 it has partially recovered to $39.

Hedge Fund Battleground: The Short Side

HLF is a battleground stock with big investors on both side of the fence. On the short side, Ackman says that the company is a pyramid scheme. On the other side of the argument is Carl Icahn, Dan Loeb and more.

On December 19th, Ackman announced that he would be discussing HLF at an Ira Sohn conference. The next day, he presented analysis concluding that HLF is a pyramid scheme because distributors' earnings come predominantly from the recruitment of other distributors. He said that since the company was founded, it has cost distributors $3.5 billion, which has been re-distributed to the top of the pyramid. On December 18th, HLF's stock was at $42.50, and its precipitous fall stopped at $26 on December 24th.

Ackman questions HLF's business model based on the following key point: he finds it inconceivable that a company with a more limited product offering, insignificant R&D and marketing expenses, and without retail distribution, can be outselling three of its major competitors combined, since its products are significantly more expensive and not meaningfully differentiated.

Therefore, the only way to sell all this product would be by bundling it along with a business opportunity. The idea behind the short thesis is that if HLF's product isn't all that great and couldn't be sold otherwise, relying on the business opportunity means that the real money is made through recruiting, making it a de facto pyramid scheme.

From the Pershing Square presentation, according to the FTC: 1) an organization is deemed to be a pyramid scheme if the participants obtain their monetary benefits primarily from recruitment rather than the sale of goods and services to consumers, and 2) pyramid schemes are illegal because they must eventually collapse.

HLF management quickly reacted to Ackman's allegations with a press release that hinted that Pershing Square was buying puts that would expire in the following days and stood to make a hefty profit with the presentation. By Friday, the company had scheduled an analyst meeting for January 7th to respond in more detail to Ackman. In its presentation, HLF countered that it spends on manufacturing, infrastructure, and R&D at least as much as its peers; and it challenged a number of assertions in the Pershing Square presentation (e.g., international distribution, price competitiveness, and the number of retail customers).

Ackman has made some of his resources available publicly:

Hedge Fund Battleground: The Long Side

During the sell-off following Ackman's presentation, a number of investors jumped in and bought the stock:

Third Point's View: In early January, Third Point disclosed an 8% position in HLF. Dan Loeb argued that price markups in "commodity" products exist where there is a community and a brand identity, which is the case with HLF. Also, there are very few complaints filed with the FTC against HLF, and it seems highly unlikely that the FTC has allowed a pyramid scheme to go on for more than 30 years now.

Third Point outlined their thesis on HLF in their fourth quarter letter, writing:

"Based on its strong financial performance, Herbalife is a classic 'compounder' – a well-managed company that sustains consistent top-line growth, has a leading market position, and steadily increases margins, earnings per share and free cash flow while demonstrating shareholder-friendly behavior.

Management has a history of returning 100% of net income to shareholders in the form of dividends and buybacks. If management were to deploy its existing $950 million buyback authorization in the $40-45 range (only taking leverage to approximately 1.5x), we estimate that run-rate EPS for 2013 could be $5.50-5.70 using the reduced share count."

Third Point believes that HLF could trade up to $55-68 per share using a 10-12x earnings multiple. Do note that CNBC is reporting that Third Point has recently sold some of its HLF position (undoubtedly locking in some profits after they purchased during the Ackman presentation carnage).

Carl Icahn's View: On Friday, February 15th, HLF was up more than 25% higher in pre-market trading, following Carl Icahn's SEC filing that showed he had bought a 13% stake in the company. Nevertheless, the stock ended only 1% higher for the day. In his activist 13D filing, Icahn said that he "intend(s) to have discussions with management regarding the business and strategic alternatives to enhance shareholder value, such as a recapitalization or a going-private transaction."

Bronte Capital's View: In mid-January, Bronte Capital posted a blog entry reflecting on a recent visit to an HLF club. It concluded that HLF is not a commodity product and that Ackman has misunderstood the whole value proposition. Presumably, HLF provides a very important and differentiating support community required to sell these weight-loss products. Bronte Capital concluded that it's a product/service that indeed works.

Hedge Fund Battleground Stock

Summary

The short thesis is that HLF is a pyramid scheme based on an overpriced commodity and a mis-represented business opportunity. The long thesis is that HLF is a well-managed company that has been growing top line at a steady pace and EPS at an accelerated rate based on operating leverage and share buybacks. Buyers took advantage of temporary pressure on the stock at the end of the year, following Bill Ackman's presentation. Both sides have wagered large sums of money, making this situation particularly interesting.

Company Background

Spirit AeroSystems (SPR) is the largest manufacturer of fuselages and other aero-structures. It traces its history to Stearman Aircraft in the 1920s, which was acquired by Boeing in the late 1920s. In 2005, it was acquired by Onex, and in late 2006 it went public. Initially, the only customer was Boeing, but with the 2006 acquisition of BAE Systems' aero-structures business in Europe, it added Airbus and expanded geographically. Customer concentration continues to be an issue with its two major customers accounting for >95% of sales: Boeing 85% and Airbus >10%.

SPR's business requires a significant upfront investment to design and develop new products, and then it recoups that money once it starts shipping the product. It uses the contract method of accounting, which means that total revenue and total cost are estimated for a contract. Then, based on the percentage-of-completion method, revenue and expenses are recognized based on the units shipped in a period.

Under contract accounting, the revenues on the contracted units are easier to estimate, but costs require assumptions on a learning curve and supply chain efficiencies as volumes ramp up. The cost of manufacturing the first unit is very different than the cost to manufacture the 100th unit.

The company has to reassess its assumptions on a quarterly basis. If the assumptions prove correct, then shipments are booked at the predicted margin and earnings are very consistent. However, if assumptions are wrong, the company needs to make cumulative catch-up adjustments. If the contracted business ends up being more profitable than originally estimated, then the company will book a gain on already-delivered units, and adjust the forward margin higher. The opposite happens if costs end up higher than expected.

In the case that the costs already included in in-process inventory and the future costs required to complete a contract exceed the expected revenue for the contract, the company takes a charge to cost of goods sold and reduces the inventory to its realizable value, meaning that future booked revenues flow through at a zero margin. As sales from zero-margin contracts continue to increase, the company's margins get pressured.

SPR has developed many programs and extrapolates in part from past experience in order to figure out the correct assumptions. Nevertheless, after it went public it started expanding into new products and working with new customers, making its past experiences unreliable predictors. The result has been a number of lump-sum charges that have made its earnings very volatile.

Current Situation & Bulls vs. Bears

Current Situation

On October 25th, SPR announced $590 million in pretax charges related to design changes and schedule delays that were not factored in to the company's original cost estimates for the development of the Boeing 787, G650 wing, G650 engine nacelle, and G280 wing programs.

Management blamed the higher-than-anticipated complexity of the company's diversification and growth strategy: it added manufacturing locations and started on many new development programs within a short timeframe, creating the perfect storm for the following years.

As a result of increasing supply chain, factory, and labor costs, SPR expects to incur a loss on many of these programs, which were previously accounted for at zero margin. The reason that SPR continues to be committed to these contracts is that it has already incurred high costs and they will be net-cashflow positive to the company.

On November 1st, it issued financial guidance for 2013 of $5.8-6.0 billion sales (>10% growth year-over-year) and $1.90-2.10 EPS, and the business should be cashflow breakeven.

Bulls vs. Bears

Investors tend to get disappointed and sell off SPR, but then the company looks like a "cheap" bet on the aircraft refresh cycle and projected growth (both in units and in content in the new aircraft). The longer-term industry fundamentals are a great tailwind, but SPR has consistently disappointed investors with its performance, and structurally it seems to be poorly positioned.

Nevertheless, following such a large catch-up adjustment, perhaps there is the potential for upwards adjustments going forward. The idea being that, if a management team takes such a large charge, it is better off to be very conservative in its estimates in order to avoid any more charges in the future.
